

GOP Scorecard: What Have THEY Done for You?

Keeping Us Out of War? — No.

Escalating global tensions, including the conflict with Iran, have unfolded without clear strategy, broad public support, or transparent consultation.

Lowering Costs? — No.

Families continue to face rising prices for gas, energy, food, healthcare, and housing, putting greater strain on everyday Americans.

Protecting Voting Rights? — No.

Ongoing efforts at the national, state, and local levels are creating new barriers that disproportionately affect women, seniors, minorities, and people with disabilities.

Strengthening Public Health? — No.

Cuts to Medicaid, the Affordable Care Act, medical research, and vaccination programs risk undermining the health and well-being of millions.

Supporting Public Education? — No.

Reduced federal support for public schools, restrictions on curriculum, and diminished workforce preparation threaten future economic opportunity and competitiveness.

Protecting Our Environment? — No.

Rolling back environmental safeguards, weakening weather monitoring systems, and stepping away from global climate efforts place long-term safety and sustainability at risk.

Advancing Civil Rights? — No.

Actions affecting reproductive rights, diversity initiatives, and equal opportunity protections are raising concerns about fairness and inclusion.

Strengthening National Security? — No.

Strained alliances, shifting global leadership, and reduced support for key partners like Ukraine have raised questions about America's role on the world stage.

Defending Our Democracy? — No.

Events surrounding the certification of elections, challenges to institutions, and ongoing debates about checks and balances continue to test the resilience of democratic norms.

The Bottom Line

Americans deserve leadership that lowers costs, protects freedoms, strengthens alliances, and upholds democratic values. The stakes are clear: the direction of our country—and the strength of our democracy—depends on informed participation and accountability.
